PUBLISHERS CLEARING HOUSE SCAM

By: Mike Burke

Here is how the "winning" scam works and what you should be aware of:

- A phone call claiming you have won a sweepstakes prize and they will ask you to send money--- STOP! Publishers Clearing House does not notify their contest winners by phone.
- An email notifying you that you have won a major sweepstakes prize but asks you to provide personal financial information or to send money --- STOP! You have most likely been contacted by a fraudulent sweepstakes scam operator. Publishers Clearing House does not notify their contest winners by phone.
- A check in the mail accompanied by a letter stating it's for a legitimate sweepstakes prize and asking you to cash it and wire/send a portion back --- STOP! You are a victim of fraud and the check is NOT real! You should always remember that at Publishers Clearing House, no payment or fee is ever necessary to enter or claim a prize.
- If you are asked to provide your card number or your financials account information to claim a prize --- STOP! Fraudulent scam artists often request this information and then go on a spending spree with your debit card or wipe out your bank account.

April is National Credit Union Month. We can't wait to help our young members learn good financial habits through this year's theme, "Be a Credit Union saver and your savings will never go extinct." Saving for your future is important but understanding WHY is just as important. During the month of April, any child ages 0-12 that opens their own account will receive a building block piggy bank.
